Lars Mortensen
European Environment Agency

Lars Fogh Mortensen has since 2006 been heading the work of the European Environment Agency (EEA) on sustainable consumption & production (SCP) and waste, including economics. His current responsibilities include providing analyses and knowledge to policy makers working on the implementation of the EU roadmap on resource efficiency, on EU and national green economy, SCP and waste policies and on EU implementation of the Rio+20 outcome document. He is a trained economist from the University of Copenhagen and has over 18 years of experience on analytical and policy aspects of sustainable development from various international organisations. Prior to joining the EEA in 2003, Lars has worked at the OECD Environment Directorate, the secretariat of the UN Commission on Sustainable Development and the Danish Ministry of Environment.
